jury sitting in a Virginia courtroom a marked the closing day of this trial From 9:30 o'clock in the morning, with an hour's recess for dinner and anothe for supper, this torrent of forceful and appealing argument poured from the lips of counsel for defense and prosecution until late in the evening.

Mr. Moore took up the brunt of the fight for the liberty of the defendants at afternoon Capt. Woods began the closing argument for the Commonwealth.

In the argument of Mr. Moore, Bywa ters was referred to as being a derelic upon the ocean of morality, and counse asked if it were surprising that he ran the room at Rotherwood and desert the ney.

Mr. Finley Peter Martin Dooley Dunne, it is true, got in, but Mr. Dunne is lit'ry. George Ade, Booth Tarkington, and James Byron Elmore, the bard of Alamo, were among those absent, the first two because they were in the middle of a chapter, it was said. One reason given for the absence of the distinguished poet of Alamo was that, in view of the presence at the speaker's table of the grand old man of the State, Mr. Elmore felt bashful about coming, after having, in bashful about coming, after having, in one of his famous poems, said something
